The purpose of photography/video, opting in or out, and respect for privacy

Photographs and/or video produced by KU are used for various recruitment publications and/or websites related to your School or program, research conducted at KU, the Office of Admissions and KU in general.

If you have been asked to participate in a photo or video opportunity, you may choose to opt out but must make that known to your professor and/or to KU staff who are present at the production. In many cases, we ask for permission in advance. Your professor may ask you to sign a model release. Your signed model release is regarded as confidential information.

KU will not identify you by name when reproducing your photo. However, if you are the subject of a news story or award presentation, we'll ask permission to use your name, year in school, major and hometown. If you are the subject of a video interview, we'll first ask your permission to be videotaped and identified similarly.

KU does not allow commercial use of these materials by outside parties. Occasionally, we allow use of stock photos by news media and by non-profit organizations such as the Chronicle for Higher Education, Association of American Universities (AAU), and others.

If you desire a link to photos or videos as a personal keepsake, you must make that known to the photographer, who will add your email to the distribution list. We request that you refrain from posting or using any photo/video of a classmate without his/her permission.

Making and sharing photographs and videos are matters of trust and respect. We thank you for participating and helping raise KU to a broader view.
